Norfolk, VA - Andria McClellan's campaign for Senate District 21 announced that it raised over $113,000, with more than $152,000 cash on hand, in the first quarter of 2023. The campaign has received 267 contributions, the highest number of contributions to date. This is the third report in a row in which Andria McClellan's campaign has received over 90 percent of all contributions from Virginians. Notably, over 65 percent of contributions this quarter came from Hampton Roads residents. She has now raised over $317,000 for her campaign to be District 21's State Senator.

Andria McClellan has outraised her previous two reports for her campaign for Senate District 21 without support from public utility companies.

"This past quarter makes it clear that momentum is on our side," said Councilmember Andria McClellan. "Our supporters have seen both the work that I have done to help Norfolk residents as our city council member and the work to talk to voters all across the 21st District. I am proud that this campaign is funded by everyday Virginians who are ready to have a State Senator that stands up for them.

"Norfolk residents are ready for their own State Senator that will protect their right to abortion, protect the freedoms of LGBTQ+ Virginians, fight inflation and the rising cost of living, address flooding and make our communities safer by expanding common sense gun reform. Our team is in a better position than ever to win this race."

Andria McClellan is a Norfolk City Councilmember who represents half of Norfolk, a regional leader and businesswoman, wife and a mom of three Norfolk public school students. She has been a fierce advocate for flood mitigation, expanding access to broadband, increasing public transit, reducing gun violence and ensuring transparency and citizen engagement.
